

UNDER SECRETARY CHESTER BOWLES

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Mr. Johnson and Indian aid

For 20 years the American people were given the wrong reasons for foreign aid

Discussion with Lyndon Johnson on the aid program

Speech in Nebraska on aid

Believes AID's sole purpose is to help the recipient country function better, stand on its own feet, and maintain its independence

President Johnson's involvement in the Food for Peace Program to India

In the fifties the U.S. sent wheat to India which held down the incomes of the farmer

As prices went up in '64-'66 the incentives for the farmer went up too

Does not think LBJ ever quite believed the Indians were doing as well as he knew they were doing, or trying as hard

India had a very big crop in '67 and '68 and he was put in a position of having to persuade India to take another three million tons

President Johnson held up the wheat until the last minute

India's reaction to the U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia

Common bond in attitude toward England

America's affluence makes it impossible to understand developing nations

Feels India is closer to the U.S. than Russia philosophically in matters of ideology

Tendency in the State Department to generalize about Asia

Difficult for a nation to look ahead and plan thoughtfully

Discussion with LBJ about a need for a policy in reference to Southeast Asia

South Vietnam question was a tragedy for President Johnson

Lyndon Johnson as President was more liberal than he anticipated

LBJ asked him to stay as Ambassador to India after he assumed office

Most Ambassadors to India become a sort of Ambassador of India to the United States

Changes seen in India since he first served in 1951

Birth control issue

War of 1962 between India and China opened up a new situation in Asia

Plan to give India one hundred million dollars of U.S. military equipment

Soviet military aid and technicians

Relationship with the Soviet Ambassadors in India

Communists in India

Shift in policy after Nehru's death

Divides Indian leaders into two groups

Incident when the U.S. postponed the visits of Shastri and Ayub Khan

President Johnson lacked a feeling for the sensitivity of the Indian leader

Reaction of the Indian people to the assassination of President Kennedy

Assassinations of Martin Luther King and Robert Kennedy

Free to go wherever he wished

Marxism does not fit Asia

Svetlana Alliluyeva

The Kashmir problem

Indian's believe most Americans are pro-Pakistani

Peshawar base

Offer to provide India with radios

Feels the U.S. did not pay enough attention to India

John Kenneth Galbraith

Indira Gandhi

Analysis of President Johnson