

AMBASSADOR MARSHALL BREMENT
1990

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Chinese Training	1957-1958
Type of people in Chinese training
Motivation behind Chinese training program
U.S. policy toward closed PRC
Rationale behind China policy
Development of U.S. policy toward China
Taiwan in the late 1950s
PRC-Taiwan relations
Hong Kong	1960-1963
Reporting about China
Aftermath of the Great Leap Forward
Kennedy and changes in China policy
Evaluation of the Sino-Soviet split
Focus if reporting
Moscow	1964-1966
Second Secretary in political section
Reporting on Soviet relations with the Far East
Differences between Soviet Union and China
Changing nature of Sino-Soviet split
U.S.-Soviet relations
Role of ideology in Sino-Soviet relations
Khrushchev and transition to Kosygin
Missed opportunities for the U.S
Ambassador Kohler and Stoessel
Japanese –Soviet relationship
Nationalities problem in 1960s
Singapore	1967-1970
Political officer
Situation in Singapore
U.S. policy toward Singapore
Effects of Vietnam
Influence of the PRC
Djakarta	1970-1973
Political Affairs Officer
Impression of USIA operations
Focus of U.S. policy in Indonesia

Saigon	1973-1974
Public Affairs Officer
Origin of assignment
Situation in Vietnam
Influence of Watergate on Vietnam
Moscow	1974-1976
Political Counselor
Situation in the Soviet Union in 1974
Increase in political openness
Importance of dissidents
Effect of Angola on U.S. policy
Difficulty of being a diplomat in Moscow
Intelligence value of spying on U.S. diplomats
National Security Council	1978-1981
Director of Soviet Affairs
Origin of assignment
Impressions of Zbigniew Brzezinski
Carter Soviet policy
Impact of Afghan War
Sources of NSC information
Nature of work
Impressions of Secretary Vance
Evolution of U.S. Soviet policy under Carter
Concern over possible Soviet invasion of Poland
Brzezinski as National Security Advisor
Brezhnev as a leader in 1979	