

AMBASSADOR MAXWELL D. TAYLOR
(1981 Interview)

TABLE OF CONTENTS

U.S. response to Vietnam attacks
Gulf of Tonkin - August 1964
Bien Hoa
Bombing retaliation issue
Brinks (officers) hotel
Pleiku
Washington reaction to attacks
President Johnson's decisions
U.S. commitment of troops
Bombing of North Vietnam - goals
"Gradualism" in bombing
Peking and Moscow interest in bombings
Bombing in pauses - evaluation
U.S. strategy in Vietnam - evaluation
"Smart" bombing
Turning point - decisions
Diem murder
Tet victory aftermath
Failure to declare war
U.S. premature forces withdrawal
Laos settlement
CIA operations in Vietnam and Laos
Lou Conein's theory
Taylor's Vietnam visit	1957
Refugee problem
General Sam Williams
South Vietnamese military training
Taylor's mission to South Vietnam	1961
President's instructions
Edward Lansdale
Did Diem ask for Lansdale?
Laos-Vietnam relationship in 1961
Hanoi as source of the problem in South Vietnam
Intelligence on South Vietnam unreliable
U.S. intelligence gatherers
MAAG upgraded to MACV

- General Harkins
- General McGarr
- Helicopters introduced
- General McGarr
- U.S. press and General Harkins
- Viet Cong intelligence sources
- Quality of U.S. intelligence

Secretary McNamara's Vietnam visit 1963

- CIA chief John Richardson
- CIA operations
- Rumor of anti-Diem coup
- Diem coup a disaster
- U.S. responsibility regarding coup
- Vietnamese attitude towards central governments
- Lodge-Harkins relationship sour
- Lodge's "one man show"
- Vietnam disorder increase noted
- ARVN poor performance in North Vietnam
- General Westmoreland
- Korean example (KATUSA)

Interdepartmental ad hoc committee (Vietnam) 1964

- Responsibilities and duties

Bombing of North Vietnamese

- Moscow and Peking consideration
- Gradualism issue
- Discussions at conferences

Choices for ambassador

- Robert Kennedy?
- Volunteers
- Taylor reluctance

Johnson seeks Taylor as ambassador to Vietnam

- Johnson-Taylor relationship
- Kennedy-Johnson animosity
- Johnson confers complete responsibility to Taylor
- U.S. Army landing at Danang
- Nolting-Harkins relationship